QUESTIONS OF THE WEEK

(Editor's note: Here are some questions asked by Virginia farmers during the past week, as reported by county agricultural agents. Staff members of the Virginia Polytechnic Institute Agricultural Extension Service and-or Experiment Station supply the answers).

Q. Should I sell some cattle now since prices are up from October levels, or should I wait until spring?

A. If slaughter cattle are close to desired weight and finish, it would be a good idea to sell them now. However, there is no particular advantage in selling feeder cattle now. Get some more weight on them first.

Q. What are prospects for hog prices next fall and winter?

A. Prices are expected to start a seasonal decline from $17.50 to $18.50 in September to a low of $16.50 to $17.50 in November and December.

Q. How much hay should I be feeding my beef cows?

A. All they will eat.

Q. How soon can I plant oats since I did not get them in this fall?

A. Use a winter variety and plant as soon as you can get on the land in February up to about March 15. Ask your county agent, or write the VPI Agricultural Extension Service, Blacksburg, for a free copy of the circular on growing of small grains.

Q. How long will pine seedlings last in the bale, and how long if heeled in?

A. Don't take chances. If the seedlings cannot be planted a day or so after being received, heel them in. They will last a minimum of three weeks if properly heeled in and watered.

Q. How can I kill chickweed in fall-seeded alfalfa?

A. Use dinitro. In established stands, CIPC is recommended. Ask your county agent, or write the VPI Agricultural Extension Service, Blacksburg.

Q. What should I do with hams and shoulders which were frozen before they took salt?

A. You will have to be very careful about spoilage. Put the meat where it will keep at about 34 to 40 degrees, and put cure, or additional cure, on immediately.

Q. At what age should cattle be vaccinated for blackleg?

A. From birth to 18 months of age. The sooner the better.

Lime Hungry Soils Work Below Capacity

If the soils on your farm are hungry for lime, your crop yields aren't up where they could be.

Dr. H. L. Danton, head of the agronomy department at Virginia Polytechnic Institute, says most Virginia soils need lime added to produce crops most profitably. Different crops need different amounts. Generally, legumes need more lime than non-legumes, and many variations exist within the legume family.

Many reasons are proffered for applying lime. And many of them are good reasons. Most important of all, Dr. Dunton says, is the fact that crops grow better when they are grown on soils of the proper pH.

The agronomist says no farmer can afford to apply lime by a "hit or miss" method. Some fields are receiving more lime than needed, others not enough. He has these suggestions:

Don't apply lime just because someone said it's a good idea, or because your neighbor got excellent results from limig. On the other hand, don't wait to apply lime because your neighbor didn't get any response. His soils may not have needed lime.

Study each field on your farm. Have the soil tested, and be sure to get a representative sample or samples from each field.

After your soil has been tested, and you have the analysis, discuss with your county agent or some other qualified person the results of the test, the time and amount of lime last applied, the type of soil, and the lime requirements of the crops you are going to grow.

Dr. Dunton says now is an excellent time to send in soil samples for testing. If lime is needed it can be applied well before the spring planting season.

There eventually comes a time when anybody gets tired of work.

You may have any number of good excuses for not doing something, but nobody is interested in any of them.
